Continuation of Substance of Interview including description of the general nature of what was agreed to if an agreement was reached, or any other comments:

Overview of the invention including the differences between the mapping of the data done in the Vedula reference and the invention was discussed. Although Vedula teaches the mapping of attributes from source to target and suggests databases and Schemas, he fails to explicitly describe that the mapping includes mapping from different target and source formats such as a relational database to an XML document. The proposed language states:

"wherein the one or more attributes, of the one of said source and said target that is said relational database, correspond to one or more columns in one or more tables in said relational database"

The mapping further uses an XSLT according to the teachings of Vedula that require more resources to convert from the target XML format to a format for the specified relational database. Furthermore the examples disclosed in the Vedula reference describe mapping between two of the same formats with different structures using an XSLT.

The Lau reference teaches the use of Schemas for mapping attributes that however use instance data which is different than the actual attribute data used in the invention. Although the proposed amendment appears to overcome the reference, further review of the references is required since no official amendment has been recorded. All responses are subjected to further search and consideration..
